

As the child of an active duty military member, I have had a very different upbringing than your average child. I have spent the last 12.5 years living overseas with my family. This has given me the privilege of experiencing many diverse cultures and traveling the globe. This unique lifestyle has shaped me into a resilient, independent, and adaptable individual. I am 17 and currently a junior in high school and am learning to navigate this pivotal stage of figuring out my personal and professional aspirations. While living abroad posed challenges in exploring college and career options, I am now determined to pursue a criminology degree and continue my passion for softball in college. Inspired by my mother's shared interest in true crime documentaries, my lifelong goal is to become a homicide detective and contribute to justice. Despite my goals for becoming a detective, I am dedicated to balancing my ambitions in criminology and exploring opportunities as a model/actor.

Having traveled and cherishing those experiences, I recognize that a career in the entertainment industry aligns with my passion for exploration. The prospect of venturing into new locations not only presents exciting opportunities but also allows me to meet diverse individuals and embrace new experiences. My creativity has always been a driving force, and I believe it is a valuable asset for the demands of the entertainment industry. The dynamic nature of this field requires thinking outside the box and being inventive, a challenge that I am eager to take on and enjoy doing so.

Drawing a parallel with my aspiration to become a detective, I understand the importance of creativity and unconventional thinking in solving crimes. The ability to navigate through challenging scenarios is a shared characteristic between these two seemingly different paths. While acknowledging that the entertainment industry may be demanding at times, I am confident in my adaptability and quick learning abilities. These qualities have been honed through years of experiences, and I believe they will prove beneficial in pursuing my dream within the entertainment realm. Ultimately, my overarching goal remains rooted in achieving success, deriving enjoyment from my endeavors, and bringing smiles to myself and others.